Looking back at our first year at Teach for the Philippines, I reflect on the challenges that we faced in setting up an organization that could successfully recruit, train and place some of the most promising young student leaders of the Philippines to teach in high need public school classrooms. It has given me great pleasure to see how we collectively came together to overcome these and start the process of building the foundations of a committed institution. We remained focused on our belief that inequity in education is a solvable problem and that by enlisting committed individuals, and investing in these young leaders, we can contribute to the long term goals of the Department of Education. This conviction has served as the most dynamic catalyst to invigorate our efforts.

Our team at Teach for the Philippines has proven that we can contribute to the national education agenda by remaining focused on a long term vision and executing on our plans by working with our partners to find innovative solutions. The end result has given us great hope for the future and we would like to express our deepest gratitude to our partners for helping us accomplish our goals in our pioneering year. All of them have shared our vision and, more importantly, they have enabled us to learn as a team. I am grateful for the optimism and commitment we collectively shared in making the dream of Teach for the Philippines a reality. We hope that this Annual Report will serve as a testament to this extraordinary effort by all.

Thank you for your unwavering support and interest in Teach for the Philippines. I would also like to recognize, most especially, our wonderful team, our incredible partners, our outstanding colleagues in the Philippines, and all our global friends who believed in us--we could not have done any of this without you.

With our heartfelt gratitude,

Lizzie Eder Zobel

I. Our Story.

Teach for the Philippines is a for-purpose, non-stock, non-profit organization that works to provide all Filipino children with an inclusive, relevant, and excellent education. We enlist some of the country’s most promising young leaders to teach for two years in public schools throughout the Philippines. Through their experiences in the classroom, Teach for the Philippines transforms these leaders into lifelong advocates for educational equity.

Vision: By 2050, all Filipino children will have access to an excellent and relevant education.

Mission: We identify, develop, and support a community of leaders working to end educational inequity.

With a fast-growing team of individuals, driven by a common passion for expanding educational access, Teach for the Philippines looks forward to leaving our mark on the country.
A Dedication to Nation-Building:

Teach for the Philippines’ most valuable assets are our Teacher Fellows whom we recruit under the Fellowship Program. Through official partnerships with Local Government Units, the Department of Education and all our Champions, we are able to:

Employ High-Achieving Leaders As Teachers
Teach for the Philippines takes some of the most promising of each year’s graduating class and pool of young professionals – those who are compelled to service but who otherwise might not have considered teaching in a public school. They are put through a rigorous selection process that tests their leadership abilities, their commitment, and their grit ensuring that they can commit to this significant role. They receive intensive training in our Summer Institute, following modules in Teaching as Leadership, literacy and reading strategies, and curriculum content. The kind of Teacher Fellows we pick and the Alumni we ultimately produce are highly sensitive to the cultural landscape; eager to share their knowledge; thoughtful and self-reflective; optimistic in their outlook and have a bias for action.

Create Opportunities for Partnership, a Platform to Engage all Filipinos
Through our Civic Engagement Program we collaborate with private corporations and individuals to bring volunteerism to public schools through Brigada Eskwela and “Renovate to Educate” builds. Teach for the Philippines also invites speakers into the classroom to expose students to various fields and interests. When schedules permit, Teach for the Philippines brings students on learning excursions to world-class educational and professional facilities to broaden their minds.

Add to the Diversity in School Communities
The presence of our Teacher Fellows in public school classrooms represents a considerable gain to communities. Teacher Fellows diversify the field of public school instruction and thereby help their students engage beyond the environment with which they are familiar.

Complete the Education Package
Sustainable change happens when communities and external organizations come together to solve challenges by exchanging innovative ideas. Many are responsible for the foundation of a progressive and excellent education: well constructed infrastructure and the accompanying hardware. Teach for the Philippines believes in completing the package by providing the software, our Teacher Fellows, to support and enhance the work that is ongoing in the classrooms.

Admissions

We recruit some of the most promising young Filipino leaders, graduates of public and private universities and colleges all over the country and abroad. Each applicant goes through a rigorous admissions process, and only those selected become Candidate Fellows. They are required to attend a two-month Summer Institute to be certified as Teacher Fellows. Upon graduation from the Summer Institute, they then sign a two-year commitment with the organization.

We seek individuals who believe in and remain committed to our Core Values. Leaders who:

1. Focus on the mission.
2. Constantly learn from everything and everyone.
3. Roll up their sleeves to attain shared goals.
4. Operate with integrity.
5. Bring people together.
6. Act decisively and excellently despite ambiguity.
7. Persevere.

During the Second Admissions cycle, we reached ~9,000 individuals and received 535 completed applications from across the Philippine Islands and abroad. With even more rigor in an already selective Admissions process, the team continues to work non-stop to build a pipeline of leaders for future cohorts.

“Kung gusto kong magtiwala sila sa kanilang kakayahan; dapat na mas maniwala ako na kaya kong gawin angkahit ano. Sama-sama kaming uusad nang may bilib sa sarili sa pagguhit man at sa kahit ano pa.”

“In order to help them believe in their abilities, I need to believe even more that we can do anything. We will move forward together believing in each other”

Markley Villarin, Teach for the Philippines 2013 Cohort

Our acceptance rate hovers around 15% of all applications received.

Civic Engagement Program

Teach for the Philippines understands how critical it is to involve multiple stakeholders. Our joint mission requires the participation of the private and public sector, multinationals, multilaterals and not for profit organizations, educators, parents, children and the community in and around our public schools. We call this our Civic Engagement Program.

Our Teacher Fellows support existing initiatives in their schools, bring in their own skillset and give access to their networks and resources, as well as those of Teach for the Philippines. Truly, we are a movement built on collaboration.

The organization creates progressive, interactive learning environments, and conducts activities complementary to our day to day work in the schools. These activities include inviting a variety of speakers into the classroom to introduce their students to various fields and interests (Teach for the Philippines Week), and bringing their students on learning excursions to world-class educational and professional facilities (TFP Week Flipped).

Our Renovate to Educate and Brigada Eskwela programs help uplift the basic infrastructure standards of education that every Filipino child is entitled to. These programs facilitate renovation projects between public schools and private organizations. The results of our thorough assessment of a selected public school’s needs are matched to the corporate social responsibility expectations of partner private organizations.

Even with these programs and events in place, we are keen to extend our reach and to find new and exciting ways of expanding the movement for educational equity. Teach for the Philippines continues to explore partnerships with local and international institutions to increase access to education for all public school students.

Who are involved in our Civic Engagement Program?

1. Champions who make Teach for the Philippines’ co-curricular (e.g. tutorials and reading programs) and extra-curricular events possible
2. Civic Engagement Interns who assist the staff team on a temporary basis during the summer
3. Individuals who lead our After School Tutorial Program
4. Experts who collaborate in the training and professional development of Teacher Fellows
5. Our ambassadors: local to the Philippines and abroad
Every day in the public school brings new challenges; but each new day gives us another chance to love our students and teach them in the best way possible. I fall in love every day with 49 students. I love 11 doctors, 8 teachers, 6 police officers, 4 engineers, 3 dentists, 3 stewardesses, 2 seamen, 2 pilots, 2 singing divas, 2 superstar actresses, 1 accountant, 1 mechanic, 1 nurse, 1 chef, 1 footballer, and 1 soldier. I love 49 students who will someday change the world. I’m just here to give them that extra lift, that extra push.

Miggy Zaballero
2013 Fellow at Sto. Cristo ES
Our First Cohort:

- impacts ~3,000 Grade 3 public school students in 15 communities
- teaches an average class size of 50-60 students
- conducts tutorial programs & house visits after school
- has spent over 62,400 hours in the classroom

Understanding the educational reality of 90% of Filipino students creates a consciousness that the inequity must be addressed with urgency. Before our young adults begin their role as teachers in public schools, they must attend an intensive pre-service program called Summer Institute. Summer Institute is an eight-week training program on progressive pedagogy and curricular requirements.

Candidates are trained in teaching methodologies, content based instruction and differentiation. Additionally, our educational partner university provides Candidates with courses in Psychology of Learning, Assessment and Evaluation, Effective Teaching Strategies, and Classroom Management Training. This year’s Summer Institute was hosted in Dagupan, Pangasinan in partnership with University of Pangasinan-PHINMA Education Network and Loyola Marymount University (USA) School of Education.

2014 Candidates and 2013 Fellows learned from experienced teachers, principals and supervisors from the Department of Education. Through a partnership with Coca-Cola FEMSA’s “Coordinates for Life”, our Summer Institute also included workshops and lectures on life skills to provide parents, teachers and other adults with resources to act as a continuing support system to children.

Summer Institute provides an opportunity for Candidates to improve their own education by learning what it means to become transformational teachers. What is more, the Programming and Training team continues to provide supplementary courses on pedagogies and ongoing professional development over the 24-month Fellowship.

The organization values inclusivity and collaboration and invites principals and teachers from the local community schools with whom we partner to co-learn progressive pedagogies. We are keen to share our world class training and ongoing professional development sessions with our co-teachers and school communities.

II. Future Plans.

Teach for the Philippines commits to keeping education at the top of the national agenda and restoring prestige to the teaching profession.

This year, we’ve begun to explore partnerships with several local government units in and around Metro Manila.

As we grow, we continue to improve our training and professional development: we begin in the classroom, continue with a 24-month training program, and then graduate our Fellows onto alumni pathways.

Teacher Fellows hail from diverse backgrounds: Math, Psychology, Economics, Education, Social Sciences, Engineering and Literature to name a few. Currently, the 2013 Teacher Fellows are one year into their commitment and will be graduating into our Alumni program in March 2015. Teach for the Philippines’ Alumni are high-energy young professionals who now not only have impressive resumes, but also have real-time experience on the ground -- succeeding despite challenges and achieving against the odds. We are excited to roll out our Alumni Mentorship Program this coming school year.

Project Evaluation

Teach for the Philippines is developing a long-term framework with professors associated with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Abdul Latif Jameel Poverty Action Lab (MIT-JPAL) to evaluate the impact of the program on an extended timeline. We are working with the MIT-JPAL to measure the effectiveness of the different elements of the program. These elements include the impact of Teacher Fellows on students’ academic achievement and the learning community, as well as the impact that our alumni have in education reform among other variables.

Inside the classroom, Teach for the Philippines measures Teacher Fellow impact on students’ academic achievement in multiple ways: the National Achievement Test (NAT) scores, the Philippine Informal Reading Inventory (PHIL IRI) scores, dropout rates, completion rates and transition rates of students. We expect that our Teacher Fellows will enable more students to graduate successfully from elementary school and onto further education with the skills stated in the Basic Education Sector Reform Agenda of the Department of Education. Eventually, we also aim to measure the impact of our Teacher Fellows on our students’ trajectories.

Perhaps most importantly, our Teacher Fellows have little by little been able to instill in their kids the importance of education and to continue to further their own education.

Most teachers never forget their first parent-teacher conference. Here’s Hayden’s Story.

Parent: Sir, salamat po. (Sir, thank you.)

Me: Salamat nga po, ma’am, sa pag-attend ninyo ng meeting kahit may pasok kayo. (No, ma’am, thank YOU for attending the meeting even though you had to report to work today.)

Parent: Hindi po, sir, salamat po kasi ngayon lang ako naka-meet ng teacher ng anak ko na may tunay na pagmamahal sa mga bata. (I have to thank YOU because this is the first time I’ve met a teacher of my child who genuinely loves the students.)

The mother I got to talk to is a public high school teacher and even had to ask permission from the principal of her school to be absent today to attend our parent-teacher conference.

This was because according to her, she wanted to know who Ginoong (Mr.) Bale is because her son talks about Ginoong Bale a lot when he gets home.

At….. sumabog ang puso sa saya, at namatay ako sa galak. (And at that moment, my heart burst with joy and I died of happiness.)

We remain grateful to the private individuals, organizations, and corporations who believe in Teach for the Philippines and make our work possible by sharing their expertise, time, and generous financial support.
VI. Our Experiences

“Stories make us more alive, more human, more courageous, more loving.”

Madeleine L’Engle

Allow us to share with you what makes each of us come alive every day. Below are personal stories from individuals on our team:

“...On Monday, we join 600,000 brothers and sisters at arms in classrooms around the country responsible for touching the lives of 22.5 Million Filipino children.

... Each one of you will begin your own personal leadership journey. You will own it. The sweat, the tears, the blood, the laughter, and the fears...the choices we make every day...all these will test our character. Leaders are not borne from lives of leisure. Someone who has never lived beyond his or her comfort zone cannot wield leadership successfully. Successful leaders, by definition, are set apart because they survive in the face of adversity and make a difference in the lives of others.

To be here tonight, you must believe deeply that the opportunities and possibilities available to a child should not be determined by the circumstances of his birth. You lead your students, your friends, your peers to believe this with you. In the classroom or in the office, you lead others to work on this with you. You are doing something to make a difference. Make it count.

Clarissa I. Delgado
COO Message to the Team, May 2013

...it was a privilege to visit Teach For the Philippines last week. Their inaugural cohort of 54 amazing fellows - including some of the very top graduates of the Philippines’ most respected universities - are in the midst of their training. It was inspiring to engage with such a seasoned team that had been working to improve education for some time before determining to launch Teach For the Philippines as a way to get at the core of the solution to their country’s very pressing educational challenges. While there is significant economic growth in the Philippines, the lack of a strong education system is holding the country back severely: only 30% of Filipino children are reading independently by grade six, almost half drop out before secondary school, and only 14 percent make it through the 10-year system. It was inspiring to hear the program’s board members reflect on why Teach For the Philippines holds such promise to develop a force of future leaders who will prioritize education in a new way and who will understand what needs to happen to ensure that children in the Philippines fulfill their true potential.

Wendy Kopp
Email to Teach for All Network May 8, 2013
A few days after Typhoon Yolanda hit the Philippines, I overheard my students wishing they could also help the victims of the storm. I was moved by their desire to help others and also felt a little heartbroken because they felt like they couldn’t help because of their own financial limitations.

This week, we started our Bayani (Hero) theme in the classroom in relation to Andres Bonifacio’s 150th birthday. As a class, we’ve identified how one can become a hero in small ways—lining up properly, telling the truth, treating others with respect, and the list goes on.

The other day, two of my students came up to me and told me about a wallet. They happily reported that they returned the items to a teacher. It was quite endearing to hear them tell the story with pride and joy. I knew they felt proud of what they did. And it was in that moment that I decided that we should push through with: Shoebox Love.

The boxes don’t just carry messages of hope and love for the typhoon survivors. They’ve become symbols of hope and inspiration for many of my kids—that what THEY do CAN make a difference in other people’s lives. I believe that being able to help others can be very empowering. Not only does it give them the courage to dream bigger for themselves but it also helps them explore the possibility of including others in those dreams.

Cris Tanjutco
2013 Fellow at Holy Spirit ES

Since the first week of class, I’ve been asking my 14 year olds to stay for remedial classes to learn to read. This is their third time in Grade 3 and they seem to believe they will never pass.

“Ma’am, bakit pa ako papasok e sigurado namang Grade 3 ako ulit”. (Ma’am, what’s the use of going to class when I’m surely going to be in Grade 3 again next year.) I found out they’ve repeated 3rd grade so many times because after two weeks of school, they would stop and return again the following year.

I started walking them home to see the environment of their community. One of them seemed uncomfortable the first time I asked if I could walk him home. Yesterday was the third time I walked him home and our relationship in school has improved from there.

Last Thursday, my boys finally agreed to try to read for the first time this school year. They were no longer afraid to try. They were no longer embarrassed to show their younger classmates that they’re just starting to read letters. Instead, they looked at me when I said “Kag Teacher ka lang tumingin. Kaya mo yan” (Just look at Teacher. You can do it.) and they said their first “ba be bi bo bu”. It was a magical moment!

My advisory class for S.Y. 2013-2014 was the last section of Grade 3 in the biggest elementary school in the Philippines. Majority of my students were overage for their grade (7 yrs.-17 yrs. old). Among them were, Jay and Elmer who made my worst day very significant.

It was the first Friday of the school year and I was trying to look the part of a real public school teacher, literally and figuratively. I wore a blue knee-length, smart casual dress that day. I thought this meant or showed I dressed for the part: presentable, respectable and in control. The two boys yelled curses and appeared to mean that these were academic answers to my questions.

At the end of the class, I called them, asked for their notebooks and asked their parents to come the next day. I wrote letters to their parents. While doing so, I felt their hands touching my thighs. I held back my tears and removed their hands and slammed their notebooks on their arm chairs and walked out.

I could not understand. There were questions in my head, some still unanswered to this day. In particular, I struggled with defending my rights as a woman, balanced against my role as teacher of teenagers. The next day, I spoke with their parents and dealt with the issue head on. I began to understand that my students went home to a challenging environment, and I could not blame them fully for their actions.

Elmer, was abused by his dad and also constantly saw his mom abused. Jay came from a poor family, with two brothers in prison. After learning this, I started to create special projects and held one-on-ones for the first two months of the school year. From 9am-12nn, I held subject and reading remedial classes and while doing so, also had the opportunity to talk to them on a more personal level.

They shared with me their dreams. Elmer wanted to be an engineer. He told me he wanted to construct houses and apply his math skills. Jay on the other hand, wanted to be an accountant or a police man, reflecting on his own personal dreams and the ones he had for his siblings.

Suddenly, the one-on-ones stopped working for Elmer. He stopped going to school and spent most of his time with his friends who were into drugs and other vices. I visited his home three times and reminded him about our conversations, and his dreams. The last time I visited him was on September 5, 2013. On September 6, 2013, he came back to my classroom. He was unprepared, he did not even wear his uniform and he didn’t bring his bag. He just sat there, like a lost and confused boy looking for a place to feel safe. I have not seen him since. I still wonder about his whereabouts and have so many unanswered questions.

Jay is a complete opposite story. Although at times the bully of my class, he has since become responsible and loving. He became one of my top achievers in class. He became a sparrow, a student who taught me about unconditional love.

Allow me to share with you two things I believe every teacher should always remember. First, learn to forgive yourself. You cannot help everyone. Like Elmer, in my story. But do everything you can do. All you can do is hope and think about the day he might remember the things you’ve said. Second, learn to love every day. Loving means facing souls daily and understanding their whys. It also means giving every ounce you have and believing it will be enough.

“One point of broad agreement in education is that teachers matter greatly. Students of certain teachers simply do better in a way that has a marked effect on social and economic outcomes ... the single most important input variable in education is the quality of teaching.” – The Learning Curve Report, The Economist Intelligence Unit.

Dear Champion:

On behalf of Teach for the Philippines, allow us to extend to you our sincerest gratitude for sharing in our mission of ensuring educational equity. Your support will enable us to enlist promising young leaders to teach for two years in public schools throughout the country. Through their experiences in the classroom, Teach for the Philippines transforms these leaders into lifelong advocates for education equity.

We are keen to continue sharing with you our vision of a reformed education system. As we build our nation together and move towards expanding access to quality education for all Filipino children, we will be sure to keep you updated on our progress.

Please do not hesitate to reach out to us should you have questions, need information, or even if you just want to drop by the office. It would be an absolute delight to have you over for coffee. Again, thank you very much for believing in the work that we do.

Sincerely yours,
